Winds of Destiny
(Anthology: Second Time Around)

Sitting alone in a bar on her fortieth birthday wasn't something Katherine Armand had ever wanted to do. She thought she'd been happily married to a stoic, dependable husband—had chosen him because he was the polar opposite of the charismatic scoundrel, Michael Whitfield, who had broken her heart fifteen years ago—only to recently find that her rock-solid husband liked nympho-Barbies in his bed.

Marriage over. Better to pay attention to her career. A big-shot developer from Anderson and Associates was flying into her sleepy, coastal fishing village to discuss building a resort whose revenue would allow the community to build a desperately-needed small hospital. She was a top-notch negotiator for her law firm. Anderson was eager for the land. This should be as smooth as sailing gentle Gulf waters.

Except Anderson sent its top man to broker the deal...and Katherine hadn't planned on having to bargain with Michael Whitfield again.
